Additional Notes:

1. This information is subject to change. Students planning to attend any four-year institution should always verify the world language admission and graduation requirements for each specific university and major.

2. In order to satisfy the world language requirements, students must complete their credits in a single language. One year/quarter of Spanish and one year/quarter of Japanese will not meet the requirements; both years/quarters must be in the same language.

3. Many universities provide alternate ways to meet their world language requirement, which could include but is not limited to: completing education in a non-English speaking country through 8th grade, taking a proficiency exam, Advanced Placement or International Baccalaureate test scores, or other ways in which a student can demonstrate language proficiency. Consult with your school(s) of choice for more information on alternate options.

4. All of the four-year institutions listed on this sheet accept American Sign Language (ASL) as a world language.

5. The University of Washington tends to have more specific admissions requirements (and graduation requirements for the Seattle campus) related to world language than some other universities. Check out these websites for additional information for UW:
